Findings and Recommendations

Program Review Conclusion

| Program Review Section | Findings | Recommendations |
|--|--|--|
| I. Program Assessment A. Program Learning Outcomes Analysis based on the National Norms | Based on the review of four Ph.D. in Counseling/Marriage and Family Therapy accredited from the COAMFTE, Daybreak Ph.D. Program Learning Outcomes are consistent with their learning outcomes. Daybreak doctoral programs appear to emphasize more research learning outcomes than theories/practice learning outcomes. | Need to develop a curriculum making a good balance among research, theories, and clinical works, which promote evidence-based practices. |
| I. Program Assessment B. SWOT Analysis | Daybreak has many internal strengths including qualified faculty, well-designed curriculum, and multi-cultural atmosphere. Yet the lack of programmatic accreditation and advertisement, Daybreak has not been recognized in the subject field. | Need advertisements and community reach-out to recruit students. |
| II. Curriculum Assessment A. Course Analysis | Need to provide more structured research courses to help students prepare their Comprehensive Exam and Dissertation. | Daybreak should offer research elective courses to help students work on their Comprehensive Exam and Dissertation. |
| II. Curriculum Assessment B. Curriculum Analysis | Daybreak Ph.D. Counseling program does not require internship or clinical hours. | Daybreak might need to include practicum and internship courses into the curriculum. |

Overall, I felt supported. Academic and student support can be increased by meeting with students more regularly and providing more structural and in-depth state licensure advice and creating a road map to follow through the program. Also, since classes were recorded, it could be an option to buy the classes whether in bulk or individually since not everyone would want whole classes. Instructional and clinical resources, we had great resources, but instructors and TAs were not trained well on the online platform, so it created little delays.

The instructor helped students understand the concept of psychopathology. Not only that, but the instructor also provides students with the latest research material to study the various aspects of psychopathology seen in the clinical setting, helping them to understand pathology from different perspectives. In addition, the instructor's creativity stands out in that the curriculum integrates theory and practice by asking students to apply what they have learned in related courses to clinical situations in the final project.
